

Partners step aside. It's time to let associates shine in court.

AUGUST 3, 2021

Kathi Vidal, Winston & Strawn's Silicon Valley office managing partner and founder of the Next Generation initiative, was quoted featured in a Reuters article regarding the influx of "stand-up" court opportunities now available to junior lawyers as a result of the pandemic. Kathi Vidal, Winston & Strawn's Silicon Valley office managing partner and founder of the Next Generation initiative, was quoted featured in a Reuters article regarding the influx of "stand-up" court opportunities now available to junior lawyers as a result of the pandemic. Courts' move to digital proceedings eases associates' barrier to entry and lets mindful judges give the next generation of lawyers a chance to shine.

Kathi explains in the article that "When judges say they want to hear from junior lawyers, it's the best way to get opportunities...It means clients are doing exactly what the judge wants. You get the best results if you do what the court wants to see." U.S. District Judge Alan Albright in Waco, Texas weighed in, saying that he will do anything he can to encourage clients and law firms to give newly practicing lawyers a chance.

Read the full article here.

To learn more about the Next Generation Lawyers initiative, click here.

1 Min Read

Related Locations

Silicon Valley

Washington, DC

Related Topics

Reuters

Next Generation Lawyers

Related Regions

Related Professionals

Kathi Vidal